The primary result of the training programme is the familiarization and normalization of the usage of digital payments, particularly in rural society. For this, the entire team of trainers and the module designer deserve praiseworthy kudos for ensuring that every participant—regardless of reading level—has reached a point in their development where they are confident in choosing a digital payment method. These trainees were required to teach their fellow rural citizens all the principles of the cashless digital payment system in order to significantly advance the development of the entire village in the age of universal digital payments.

The feedback forms completed at the end of the training session very clearly showed that the stigma of rural people's defensive attitude towards technical services may be eliminated with the aid of rural minds' capacity and knowledge development through targeted training channels.

The programme also provided a crystal-clear picture of the discussed government schemes and programmes, which expects better rural community engagement in those programmes to reduce any sort of leakages, duplications, improper strikes, or friction and encourage successful implementation. Women were the primary recipients of the training programme, which served the dual purposes of empowering women for national development and equipping those in positions of authority with more professional skills in order to better utilize their positions of responsibility and power for the benefit of the government and society as a whole.
